TUESDAY, JULY 18, 1893.
MELANGE.

The selection yesterday of Prof. W. D. Alexander to be special commissioner for the Provisional Government of the Hawaiian Islands, at Washington, is to be commended. The fact that the Hawaiian historian is to co-operate with Minister Thurston in advancing annexation will serve to set a good cause in the clear light of truth, free from all partisan or exparte display. The estimation which Minister Thurston has already won for himself and the Provisional government at Washington, is but an earnest of what can be done where a cause is just and the truth is alone appealed to for its support. No man could have been selected who will carry more weight with his mission than Prof. W. D. Alexander. He is a man whose high literary attainments have won him a foremost position in Hawaii, and his well-known trait of political conservatism will guarantee that the part he will play in any future negotiations will be free from partisanship and will place the present status of Hawaiian affairs before the Washington authorities in an impartial and statesmanlike manner.

Attorney-General Smith took occasion to remind the executive and advisory councils yesterday that the Provisional government had been in successful existence just six months from the date of its organization. It was pleasant to be reminded that good government had existed in Hawaii for a period of six months, without a political or party scandal, and the announcement was met with pleasant smiles of congratulation, owing, perhaps, to its seeming somewhat out of place, when compared with the history of Hawaiian politics for the past decade. The history of the monarchy falls not pleasantly on the ear. The fact that the present government is established upon a sound financial basis, after so many spendthrift years indulged in by royalty made the announcement, after six months of good government, sound extremely pleasant to the fourteen men in the councils assembled, who represent the taxpayers of the country.

If the royalist journal that uttered a slur a few days ago regarding the silence of the annexation newspapers about certain government bonds selling at six per cent. discount at auction, had stopped to enquire into the circumstances surrounding the auction sale in question, it is highly probable the paragraph would never have been written. Enquiry discloses that the bonds sold at discount were the property of a prominent royalist who had voluntarily taken them to the amount of $4,000 in settlement of a certain ex-royalist estate. The presumption is, that, like most royalists, he needed ready cash, and placed good bonds on forced sale. They were discounted only six per cent., where such sales usually return a shortage of from fifteen to twenty-five per cent. Government bonds sold at par at private sale during the same week, if not the same day. This paper refused to notice the transaction at the time because it savored of personal matters. It is only mentioned now to show how idle is the daily prattle of the average royalist.

Among other startling absurdities in criticism, which have appeared the past few days, is a jumble of separate accounts owed the government, most of which are as good as gold—more than can be said where the average royalist owes the public treasury—published yesterday in the Bulletin. Neither time nor space admits of a specific answer to such financial twaddle. There is one point raised, however, that needs attention. It is the reference to one of the series of official reports, with which the public was regaled shortly after the national reform party came into power. In spite of the reforms proposed in the report mentioned, it is a fact none of them were instituted by the national reform party, as it is a fact no unbusiness-like or shady transaction was proved in the department of the interior, under Mr. Thurston, against whom the report was written. Speaking of national reform party reports, we respectfully suggest that the royalist journal in question give the public a detailed history of the compilation and writing of that "famous" report of the finance committee, presented to the same legislature. Such a history can be written, and it would prove a delicate morsel for the stomachs of the quondam national reformers, alias, THE ROYALISTS OF TODAY, almost to a man.

MADAME PELE'S REALM.

The Volcano of Kilauea as it Now Is.

With so changeable a dame as Madame Pele, two years witnesses a great many changes. So I find it on visiting Kilauea after that interval. When here in 1891, Halemaumau was a yawning chasm, much resembling an inverted cone, having an altitude of five hundred feet. At the apex or bottom the fires were just returning. There was a single fountain and a little pond of lava perhaps thirty feet in diameter. On every side tremendous precipices with piles of debris running to the lowest point.

Today there is a lake of fire of over nine hundred feet in diameter surrounded with a broad flat plain forming a rim perhaps five hundred feet wide, the whole inclosed by precipitous walls hard by over a hundred feet high. That is, the bottom of Halemaumau has risen certainly four hundred feet in two years. How much of this is from the inflowing of lava and how much from an upward thrust is impossible to say. But the present development is at least beautifully simple. A nearly round pit, a flat rim at the bottom surrounding a circular lake which is inclosed with a wall tilted from the edge of the rim at angle of say 40°. In short, the lake is in a truncated cone. The surface is about thirty feet higher than the surrounding rim, or "black ledge," as Mr. Lee has named it. That is, it fills up to about that level, when the walls are unable to longer stand the pressure and a break occurs at some point and the whole glowing contents rushes out and floods the ledge until a general level is attained, when the walls of the cone build up again and the process is repeated. This has happened since our arrival and the lake is again filling. A path has been made down the north-east bank of the pit and it is possible to approach the central lake when the fires are not too active.

Two days after the flooding of the surrounding floor, or rim, which filled up about ten feet, I crossed on the glowing surface, with the penalty of blistered feet and the loss of a pair of shoes, to the edge of the lake. It was a wonderfully impressive sight. On the south shore a continuous surge of fire dashed against the wall, throwing spray far over the bank to a height of perhaps fifty feet. Just under the north bank, at intervals of about two minutes, immense volumes of lava appeared to rise from the depths much resembling the crest of the flow from a powerful uncapped artesian well. From this fountain it flowed rapidly to all parts of the lake. Elsewhere there were fountains, or rather, sputtering upheavals and billows of liquid fire. Words cannot describe the impressiveness of the scene. At all times there was a constant cracking, crashing noise, caused apparently by the tremendous outward push of the melted lava in the lake against the walls of its cone. Blocks and slabs of lava were constantly sliding down the outer face and the appearances indicate a rapid enlargement of its area.

At some time in the past two years, the deep crack which crosses the path about two hundred yards from the foot of the descent below the Volcano house, has been nearly filled with lava; a flow from below probably. There is very little activity elsewhere in the crater, except near Halemaumau, where the heat and steam from cracks has visibly increased.

The mathematician of our party has estimated that the lake contains about 84,611,000 cubic feet of melted matter!

The volcano is growing in activity, and is increasingly interesting and worthy of the attention of tourists as well as the naturalist.

It would appear that Queen Liliuokalani, late ruler of the Sandwich Islands, is of a frugal mind. She was quite willing to sell whatever sovereignty she possessed to any likely purchaser, preferably the United States; but she was a trifle late in making the offer.—Editorial, Phil. Record.

The war on the blight continues, and we supply the arms and ammunition. Orders left with us for Insecticide Wash will be promptly filled and with no inconvenience to consumers. Also, in connection with this, we have imported a supply of the celebrated Lewis Combination Spray Pump which is particularly adapted for the purpose of distributing the wash.

English toilet sets are admittedly the best in the world and getting them as we do, direct from the manufacturers they are the cheapest. The Australia brought us fifty complete sets that go to you at a price that would make our buyer in London blush. They're worth double the money as an ornament even if you have no use for them in your bedroom.

The difficulty in the way of obtaining a good arrangement for mending hose has been overcome by the introduction of the "Kempshall Hose Mender" which goes to you at a quarter of a dollar, and you can make an old piece of hose as good as new with one of them and ten minutes work.

Two or three times, we have imported small quantities of a very excellent pocket knife adapted to persons whose finger nails are brittle and apt to the broken in opening a blade. The knives were such a success that we have been obliged to order more. The Australia brought them, and people who do not know what an automatic pen knife is should come in and get one.
